It opens on the 10th of May in Turin, at Res Nova - Via Accademia Albertina 10 - the exhibition Ortographie. After a first show in Milan at Zamenhof Gallery, the exhibition is enriched by the presence of new artists, making this a new beginning for this touring show.

Ortographie has been conceived as a selected group show of thirty small sample images for each artist. It has been up to each artist to build up their project and decide the disposition for their images. The show aims to offer a view on different approaches towards the photographic medium; it includes fine art and documentary photography as well as photojournalism and reportage. It intends to capture the artists during one of the most delicate moment of the creative process: the selection time - the moment when one chooses and orders the most effective images in order to give meaning and expressive strength to their creative effort.

The exhibition is part of a larger project, which aims to bring together ideas, skills and stories of a wide range of artists, each with their specific expertise, with the aim of creating a space for critical debate and sharing of competencies and expertise. The only commonalities between all of the projects are the print's format, the allocated space's dimensions and the frames.

By walking through the show, the visitor will be able to identify the different narratives behind the projects. Taking pictures is way for telling stories, it is critical how those stories are told. It will be up to the public to make a judgment of each project and their value rather than valuing individual images.

OrtoGraphie places the emphasis on ideas' development: conceptual photography, social and political reportage, documentary photography, portraiture and landscape photography, all share a common space that turns out telling us about what photography is today.
